

File 20090319.1703: Sunrise tomorrow in Oxford at 0608.

Notes from meeting with Dr Martin today at 1130:

We talked about:

- Reviewing conference papers; differences in the reviews you see for conference papers vs journal papers. Journal paper submission reviews are more in-depth usually.
- My reviewing of Dr Jirotko's paper for the RE 2009 conference.
- CanSecWest 2009 conference, starting today in Canada. One of the papers being published there today is about conducted emanations from wired keyboards. I hope that the authors of that paper, and separately the Swiss research group that has another paper on a similar topic in review for a conference right now, will cite my ACM Trans. article from 2002.
- History: conducted emanations through power lines goes back to Peter Wright's book [1] which described interception of power line emanations as far back as the 1940s.
- paranoia
- The new paper on Protection Profiles that I am writing. I showed off the beginnings of an outline this morning.
- My trip to New York tomorrow.
- Dr Martin suggested that I try to get hold of Ian Levy's PA, as that is generally a better way to guarantee that important people will actually show up for appointments. I said that I have two email addresses for Ian Levy: his public email address and the one he actually replies to.
- We discussed TODO lists, and Dr Martin gave me a walkthrough of Google Calendar.

Next meeting: Friday 27th March 2009 at 1000. On calendars.
