

File 20090407.1407: I was reminded of this when listening to Prof Angela Sasse's talk: remember what it used to say when you posted an article to USENET ca. 1986: 'thousands of computers'... 'tens of thousands of dollars' →straight to Google search results in 2009, and it's still there.

Graeme Proudler: 'Trust is an expectation of behaviour.'

Graeme Proudler: There are three classes of data: secret, private, and public.

Notes for the book:

- Tense opening scene: rumours moving through the RTG 1.0 office—a bad report is about to come out from OGD.
- Tell it like an adventure story; make the C&A folks out to be heroes.
