

File 20100531.1959: Andrea solved my practicality problem at dinner tonight: even if US accreditation standards do not imply multiple accreditors in a CDS installation, thereby seeming to invalidate my thesis, US–UK accreditations assuredly would involve multiple accreditors, as would in fact any cross-national CDS installation, of which there may be many in a coalition environment.

So I do not need to worry about the problem. It’s still a real problem, even if my theoretical model contains more degrees of freedom than would typically be encountered in any real particular situation.
