

File 20100623.0845: Notes for WAR to Dr Martin tomorrow:

GCHQ book. In this and Bamford (2002, possibly 2008) I hope to find a reason for the oft-cited difference in risk acceptance positions between US and UK accreditors of cross-domain systems. I have heard the philosophical difference expressed on different occasions by evaluators on both sides of the ocean, so evidence suggests it is a real phenomenon.

Moral hazard, derived from the early fire insurance companies in Britain and the US.
