

File 20080424.2143:

Abraham Wald recommended that they armour-plate those areas where no bullet holes had ever been seen.

Why?

Because those were the vital areas. No bullet holes had ever been observed in those locations because aeroplanes that were hit there did not survive to return to base.

It's called the problem of nonignorable nonresponse.

References