File 20090930.1448: I love those 'Getting Things Done' (GTD) folks. They're so cute. 'Work on exactly one thing at a time,' they say. Right. Then the telephone rings. Five or six emails appear in your inbox all at once, from several different bosses in a panic because a CDRL suddenly shows as late. It's due to a mis-typed year in the database. You get back to work and the Air Force releases an RFI with a response date two weeks hence. I would love to use the GTD method of storing all materials needed for a particular task in a single grabbable file folder, but that's about the only one of their techniques that I think I can use.
